WORKING FOR A

GREATER PATCHOGUE

Volume 9, Issue 4
April 2006

5 K Run

22 year old Brendan Brown of Malverne (16:18) (left) was the overall winner of the May the Road Rise to Meet Ye 5K run on March 19. 15 year old Maria Costello of Patchogue (19:46) was the first woman's finisher.

Alive after Five is Expanded

This summer there will be 12 nights of Friday festivities in downtown Patchogue. The regular street fair in which Main Street is closed begins July 7 and continues every other Friday night through September 15. This year there will also be a block party with two bands in which Havens Avenue only is closed beginning June 30 and continuing every other Friday night through Sept. 7.

Both events will feature outdoor dining.

St. Patrick's Parade

The St. Patrick's parade March 26 featured the biggest crowd turnout ever with Brookhaven Town Supervisor Brian X. Foley as Grand Marshal. The Brookhaven Town Highway Department float (right) was judged best overall.

Peconic Warpipes won the Pipe Band Mayor's Trophy, and Brownie Troop 826 was the Most Irish Unit.

Woman of the Year

Carol Proven (Floral Designs of Patchogue) with husband Dennis (above) was named this year's Brookhaven Town Women's Services Woman of the Year in Business.

Furniture Store Proposed for Sunrise Highway

The Brookhaven Town Planning Board scheduled an April 3 Public Hearing on a plan by Anthony Page of North Babylon to build a 26,000 square foot furniture showroom with 130 parking spaces on a 4.6 acre site along the Sunrise Highway south service road just east of Phyllis Drive. One acre along the Swan river to the east is to be dedicated to the Town of Brookhaven. There is also a 50 foot buffer along Franklin Ave. to the south. Glenn A. Haase of Sayville is the architect and questions may be directed to him at 631-563-3343.

Customers with Disabilities

Making it possible for customers with disabilities to purchase your goods and services is an important part of complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act. This article (adapted from the ADA website) focuses on new buildings, additions and remodeling.

New buildings

Building a new building is a perfect opportunity to include accessibility and avoid the architectural barriers that people with disabilities confront in many older buildings. This is why the ADA requires all new public accommodations and commercial facilities to comply with design standards called the ADA Standards for Accessible Design (ADA Standards). These Standards make buildings and facilities usable by people who are blind or deaf or have limited dexterity or grasping ability, as well as people who have mobility impairments.

The aim is to ensure that all commercial buildings and facilities built in the United States since 1992 are accessible to and usable by everyone, including people with disabilities. The ADA sets accessibility standards for parking lots, sidewalks, entrances, corridors, rooms, service counters, toilet facilities, handles and switches, public telephones, and many other features. Complying with the ADA Standards allows customers or employees who have disabilities to enter a building or site, move through the halls or circulation paths, access the areas where goods and services are provided or where they perform their work, and use the restrooms and other amenities that are provided.

When ADA requirements are met during construction, the additional cost of the accessible features is generally minimal. In contrast, retrofits done after construction can be very expensive and disruptive. That is why it is important for businesses to remind their architects and contractors about the importance of complying with the ADA, especially at the early stages of planning a project.

Requirements for new construction

All newly constructed buildings and facilities used by businesses and nonprofit agencies must comply with the ADA Standards. These Standards specify what elements and spaces must be accessible, how many of a particular element must be accessible, and how to make spaces and elements accessible.

Additions

When a building is expanded, the completely new spaces or elements that are constructed as part of the addition must meet the ADA Standards for new construction. The term "addition" refers to any expansion, extension, or increase in the gross floor area of an existing building or facility. An accessible route from the existing space to the added space is usually required.

Renovating, remodeling, or altering an existing building

Businesses renovate, remodel, or alter their spaces all the time. The ADA uses the term "alteration" to mean any change to an existing building or facility that affects usability. This includes remodeling, renovation, rearrangement in structural parts, and changes or rearrangement of walls and full-height partitions. The ADA does not consider normal maintenance, reroofing, painting, wallpapering, asbestos removal, or changes to electrical and mechanical systems to be alterations unless they affect usability.

The ADA law requires that when a business alters an existing facility in a way that affects usability, the areas or elements being altered must comply with the ADA Standards, which are not always as strict as the standards for new construction. The standards, however, must be complied with "to the maximum extent feasible."

The route and amenities that serve a primary function area

A core concept in determining if a building is accessible or not is the path a person travels in getting from the parking area or sidewalk into the building, to the areas where he or she works or is served as a customer, and to the restrooms and other amenities that are provided in the facility.

When a primary function area is altered, the path of travel to the altered area and the amenities serving the altered area must be made accessible, unless the costs for these changes are disproportionate. The costs for the added alterations are considered disproportionate if they exceed 20 percent of the cost of the overall alteration. In this case, you should make as many of the changes as you can without going over the 20 percent limit. Use this order of priority: entrance; route to the primary function area; at least one unisex restroom or one restroom for each sex serving the area; public telephones serving the area; drinking fountains serving the area; other elements

Exceptions: (1) When the only features being altered in a primary function area are the windows, hardware, controls, electrical outlets, or signage, there is no requirement to make the additional improvements discussed above. (2) When simply removing barriers (as discussed in lesson 4), there is no requirement to make the additional improvements discussed above.

Architectural Review Board

Business owners need village ARB approval for many changes that affect the external appearance of their buildings. The board encourages some design elements and discourages others. Here are some examples.

Signs

Wood carved signs or similar signs of man made materials are encouraged, while back lit or box lit signs are discouraged. Also discouraged are neon signs and neon window borders.

Lighting

Signs lit with overhead goose neck or similar lighting is encouraged.

Awnings

No bubble type—only shed or roll up awnings.

Window Lettering

Encouraged, on ARB approval. No paper signs in windows.

A permit application is required for all signs, illumination, awnings, facades, external painting, and any changes to a commercial building in the village. Each application is evaluated on an individual basis.
